Staying risk-on as macro tensions ease

- We stay risk-on heading into Fed rate cuts as growth slows but holds up and corporate earnings remain solid. We up long-term U.S. Treasuries to neutral.
- U.S. stocks surged to new all-time highs on the AI theme. U.S. bond yields dipped to five-month lows. The U.S. CPI showed core inflation is proving sticky.
- We look for a widely expected Federal Reserve rate cut this week amid a murky macro backdrop. We also watch central bank meetings in Japan and the UK.

We stay risk-on as the Federal Reserve likely resumes cutting policy rates this week. A softening labor market gives the Fed space to cut, helping ease brewing political tensions from higher interest rates. We think rate cuts amid a notable slowing of activity without recession should support U.S. stocks and the AI theme. We turn neutral long-term U.S. bonds: yields could fall further near term even if the structural pressures driving them up, including loose fiscal policy globally, persist.

Inflation puzzle

U.S. core services and wage inflation, 2018-2025

Source: BlackRock Investment Institute, U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, and U.S. Bureau of Economic Analysis, with data from Haver Analytics, September 2025. Note: The chart shows the three-month average change in U.S. average hourly earnings the core services PCE price index excluding housing on an annualized basis.

We stay risk-on as a much softer U.S. labor market should ease inflation pressures and give the Fed justification to resume easing policy. Until recently, we saw sticky inflation as complicating the Fed cutting rates. Inflation has fallen this year even as U.S. tariffs halted a decades-long spell of goods deflation. This was possible due to surprisingly weak services inflation – a puzzle given a strong labor market. Then job gains stalled in recent months, suggesting an ongoing cooling of services inflation. See the chart. We see risks to that view, partly because it's unclear why the labor market is soft. We may be in an unusual “no hiring, no firing” state: Fed rate cuts could boost confidence and spark hiring again just as inflation is still far above the Fed's target. This could reignite political tensions between inflation and debt servicing costs – leading to a steeper U.S. yield curve and more cautious risk stance.

We stay risk-on as we have been since the policy-driven volatility in April. U.S. equities are among the best-performing markets since then: U.S. stocks are up 31% since April 8 versus 24% for overall developed markets, according to LSEG data. The lesson? Immutable economic laws – supply chains can't be rewired overnight without major disruption – limit rapid policy change. This framing allowed us to lean against markets extrapolating big calls – and quickly deploy risk. Yet the market environment has changed a lot. The drivers have shifted from tariffs and policy uncertainty – which sparked questions about the appeal and haven status of U.S. assets – to the tensions between inflation, growth and government debt.

We stick with the AI theme. The AI theme keeps driving U.S. equity performance, with the tech sector accounting for over 40% of total return and a similar share of earnings growth, LSEG data show. We think this can persist. Yes, these companies are generating less free cash flow, but only modestly. We think elevated valuations can be justified if they keep delivering on expected 15% to 20% future earnings growth. Their credit spreads – a sign of balance sheet health – have also held steady near historic lows but we watch them as a potential warning sign of market concerns.

We need to be ready for a few very different macro scenarios in coming months. Our base case: A soft labor market allows the Fed to cut rates, a positive for equities. This could spark broader equity gains and support long-term bonds. On a six- to 12-month tactical horizon, we go neutral long-term U.S. Treasuries after having long been underweight. We also flip neutral on short-term Treasuries from overweight. Yet if the labor market were to weaken much more, Fed rate cuts won't be enough to offset the pressure on risk assets, in our view – and we would be ready to reduce risk. On the flip side, a hiring rebound could stoke inflation pressures and put the spotlight on Fed independence again, prompting investors to seek more compensation for the risk of holding long-term bonds. We prefer real, or inflation adjusted, yields to lock in income. On a strategic horizon, we stay underweight long-term government bonds and prefer inflation-linked bonds. We stand ready to pivot in all scenarios.

Bottom line: A softer labor market and slowing growth pave the way for the Fed to cut rates. We think this will benefit U.S. stocks and stay overweight. We close our long-term U.S. Treasuries underweight but see pressures for higher yields staying.

Market backdrop

U.S. pushed to new record highs, with the S&P 500 rising about 2% on the week to take its gains for the year to 12%. Tech stocks outperformed on the AI theme, with shares of Oracle surging on major cloud demand from AI customers. Ten-year U.S. Treasury yields were mostly steady near 4.00% but dipped to a five-month low. The U.S. CPI data for August showed core inflation is proving sticky even as the Fed readies to resume rate cuts this week given a softening jobs market and economy.

Week ahead

Sep. 17	Federal Reserve policy meeting	Sep. 19	Bank of Japan policy meeting; Japan CPI
Sep. 18	Bank of England policy meeting

The Fed is poised to resume cutting interest rates this week. A softer labor market gives the Fed room to cut without raising questions about its independence. Yet core inflation remains sticky, and we see this moment as an important fork in the road for the macro outlook depending on labor market developments. Both the Bank of Japan and Bank of England are expected to keep policy rates on hold next week.

Big calls

Our highest conviction views on six- to 12-month (tactical) and over five-year (strategic) horizons, September 2025

Tactical		Reasons
U.S. equities		Policy uncertainty and supply disruptions are weighing on near-term growth, raising the risk of a contraction. Yet we think U.S. equities will regain global leadership as the AI theme keeps providing near-term earnings support and could drive productivity in the long term.
Using FX to enhance income		FX hedging is now a source of income, especially when hedging euro area bonds back into U.S. dollars. For example, 10-year government bonds in France or Spain offer more income when currency hedged than U.S. investment grade credit, with yields above 5%.
Seeking alpha sources		We identify sources of risk taking to be more deliberate in earning alpha. These include the potential impact of regulatory changes on corporate earnings, spotting crowded positions where markets could snap back and opportunities to provide liquidity during periods of stress.
Strategic		Reasons
Infrastructure equity and private credit		We see opportunities in infrastructure equity due to attractive relative valuations and mega forces. We think private credit will earn lending share as banks retreat – and at attractive returns.
Fixed income granularity		We are overweight short-term inflation-linked bonds as U.S. tariffs could push up inflation. Within nominal bonds, we favor developed market (DM) government bonds outside the U.S. over global investment grade credit, given tight spreads.
Equity granularity		We favor emerging over developed markets yet get selective in both. Emerging markets (EM) at the cross current of mega forces – like India – offer opportunities. In DM, we like Japan as the return of inflation and corporate reforms brighten the outlook.

Tracking five mega forces

Mega forces are big, structural changes that affect investing now – and far in the future. As key drivers of the new regime of greater macroeconomic and market volatility, they change the long-term growth and inflation outlook and are poised to create big shifts in profitability across economies and sectors. This creates major opportunities – and risks – for investors. See our web hub for our research and related content on each mega force.

- 1. Demographic divergence: The world is split between aging advanced economies and younger emerging markets – with different implications.
- 2. Digital disruption and artificial intelligence (AI): Technologies are transforming how we live and work.
- 3. Geopolitical fragmentation and economic competition: Globalization is being rewired as the world splits into competing blocs.
- 4. Future of finance: A fast-evolving financial architecture is changing how households and companies use cash, borrow, transact and seek returns.
- 5. Transition to a low-carbon economy: The transition is set to spur a massive capital reallocation as energy systems are rewired.
